Jump to: Filming Locations (4) Filming Dates (1) 12 February 2018 - 10 April 2018 Setting a solid meeting agenda ensures the success of the meeting. It helps you stay on track and accomplish important goals. Here are some steps you can take when setting a meeting agenda.Get Input From the TeamEspecially when the meeting is collaborative in nature rather than informative, getting input from the team can help you craft the agenda. For example, if you're putting together an agenda for a staff meeting, you can create a basic list of topics and send them out to your team. That way, if someone has an important item they'd like to bring up to discuss with the group, you can add it to the official agenda. Keep in mind that not all of your team members' input will be applicable, so stick to topics that affect everyone rather than items that can be discusses in smaller groups.Start With a TemplateDepending on the type of meeting you're putting together, the agenda may need to be detailed and professional. A good example of this would be a board meeting agenda, which is of utmost importance since top members of the organization will be part of the meeting. Rather than start the process from scratch, you can download a template online. This will help you ensure that you capture all of the important pieces that should go into an agenda. Templates are available through the Microsoft Office website, and they range from conference agendas, education agendas and more.Create the HeaderThe header of the agenda should include all of the pertinent details, like the date, time and place. If you are catering to people outside of your business during the meeting, you can also add your business name, address, phone number and website. For a visual impact, add the business logo.Outline the AgendaThe next step is to put together the body of the agenda. You might use bullet points with numbers or letters. Some people like to use tables to keep the information organized. If you want to emphasize the time table for the meeting, add an "Estimated Time" column to indicate how long you expect each agenda item to take. That way, you can make sure that everyone is on track.Send the AgendaOnce you have an agenda set, you can send it out to the participants. You might get more feedback on items that need to be changed or added. That gives you enough time to make any necessary changes before handing out the final copy on the day of the meeting. COVINGTON, LA — Covington got a chance to see some filming action this year! The Netflix Original Highwaymen starring Kevin Costner and Woody Harrelson. The production spent an entire day in downtown Covington for a scene and the production blocked off a street and made the area like a 1930's feel. 16 related questions found "The Highwaymen" (now streaming on) tells the tale through the eyes of former Texas Rangers Frank Hamer (Kevin Costner) and Maney Gault (Woody Harrelson), who were enlisted to stop Bonnie and Clyde's killing spree. The film aimed to do dramatic and historical justice to the moment their posse opened fire on the duo. Wade McNabb was eventually kidnapped and murdered while on furlough, but he was killed by Barrow gang member Joe Palmer as revenge for McNabb's behavior in prison, not for ratting the gang out to Hamer and Gault. It was Palmer, not Hamer and Gault, who arranged for McNabb's furlough. Clyde Barrow was a scrawny little psychopath with jug ears and the sense of humor of a persimmon, cruel, egotistical, obsessive, vindictive, and so devoid of compassion that he appeared to care more for his machine gun and his saxophone than he did for the women in his life. On May 23, 1934, the day the law finally caught up with Bonnie and Clyde, a tow truck hauling the couple's shot-up Ford — their bloody bodies still inside — pulled into the itty-bitty town of Arcadia, La. It was a circus. Word had spread that the outlaws were ambushed on a nearby country road. Often working with confederates—including Barrow's brother Buck and Buck's wife, Blanche, as well as Ray Hamilton and W.D. Jones—Bonnie and Clyde, as they were popularly known, robbed gas stations, restaurants, and small-town banks—their take never exceeded $1,500—chiefly in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Missouri. 7. Bonnie walked with a limp after a car accident. ... As a result of the third-degree burns, Bonnie, like Clyde, walked with a pronounced limp for the rest of her life, and she had such difficulty walking that at times she hopped or needed Clyde to carry her. Mr. GUINN: Well, the movie is wonderful entertainment, but it's less than five percent historically accurate. Bonnie and Clyde did not emerge sort of as full-blown, glamorous figures, suddenly driving around the country holding up banks. Bonnie Elizabeth Parker and Clyde Chestnut Barrow, better known as the infamous pair of partners-in-crime Bonnie and Clyde, were known for their string of murders during the 1930s, but it was Frank Hamer and Maney Gault who pulled the trigger and fatally shot the couple in order to finally end their killing spree. Outlaws Bonnie and Clyde had spent over two years together on the run, but they only earned national attention after photos of the couple were discovered at a crime scene in 1933. In the depths of the Great Depression, many Americans became transfixed by the couple's criminal exploits and illicit romance. The car in which Bonnie and Clyde died is still viewable in the casino at Whiskey Pete's in Primm, Nevada. Austin, Texas, U.S. Francis Augustus Hamer (March 17, 1884 - July 10, 1955) was an American law enforcement officer and Texas Ranger who led the 1934 posse that tracked down and killed criminals Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow. Bonnie and Clyde did not give money to the poor. They may have occasionally given out small sums of money to people, but the view of them as... Bonnie isn't vilified for her sexual desires and ultimately, in the last act of the film, she and Clyde finally do consummate their relationship. ... Their love becomes separate from sexual attraction and centered on their deep personal connection to one another. 9 Price. Bonnie & Clyde's Death car, a 1934 Ford Fordor Deluxe, had a starting price of around $575 as a brand-new 1934 model. However, the Tan-colored Ford V8 had some options that shot the price to more than $700 when the Warrens acquired it (and that's about $14,000 in today's rate). But Penn thought the idea of there being some kind of sexual dysfunction in the group was important. Eventually the four collaborators settled on Clyde being impotent. Bonnie and Clyde both walked with a limp, but for different reasons—Clyde was tortured in prison which caused him to cut off his own toe, and Bonnie's leg was brutally burned in a fiery car crash (Clyde was driving). Clyde's rumored clairvoyance is used in the story through premonitions that offer a bit of foreshadowing and add a layer of suspense, particularly at the beginning when we're still in the introductory stage of Bonnie and Clyde's relationship. The car was riddled with 167 bullets. Reports vary on who actually killed the couple — any one of the many bullet wounds would have been fatal. Bonnie was hit 26 times and Clyde 17, but others say each one of them was hit more than 50 times. The band continued to tour into the late 1990s, before Jennings and Cash both started to decline in health, which prevented them from maintaining a full touring schedule. All four continued to perform as solo artists, with Jennings briefly joining Old Dogs; Jennings died in 2002 and Cash died in 2003. On May 20, 1933, the United States Commissioner at Dallas, Texas, issued a warrant against Clyde Barrow and Bonnie Parker, charging them with the interstate transportation, from Dallas to Oklahoma, of the automobile stolen in Illinois. The FBI then started its hunt for this elusive pair.
